The reading room opened in a former boathouse on the east bank of the river. Its long windows face the water, and on bright mornings the light moves across the tables like a slow tide. Visitors come to read newspapers, write letters, study for examinations or simply sit for an hour in a quiet place.